By mumcampbellIt is difficult to find information on language processing impairments. Most books are about speech. I was hoping to find a book with practical tips, games, strategies etc. to help my son. If you already have a diagnosis and a general understanding of your child's issues only one chapter of this book will be helpful. I wish there were reviews of assistive technologies, examples of ways to improve listening and speaking such as visual schedules etc- it left me wanting a lot more concrete examples of how to support my child through the day. Anyone found a book with more concrete suggestions?

By Phil Commanderi felt that this was a really good introduction to Language Processing Problems that children can have. I bought it to learn more about processing in order to help my autistic son but after reading it i saw that my neurotypical daughter also has a very slight issue processing. That is why she has a hard time with long division and when she is quickly telling us a story she sometimes has a hard time spitting it out...it is mild but the book offers basic suggestions to overcome the very simple problems some children have. It's easy reading and once again I feel its a very good intro to this issue.

By CustomerI enjoyed reading this very down to earth book about a problem that impacts lots of school age children. I would have rated it higher but some of the grammatical issues in the book were a distraction.

Book by Gaulin, Cindy

About the AuthorCindy Gaulin, M.A. CCC-SLP, is a pediatric speech-language pathologist with almost 20 years experience helping children with communication difficulties. Her creative work with children draws on her broad undergraduate and graduate training in linguistics, anthropology, psychology and communication disorders. She has worked in clinical, research and educational settings, but has focused primarily on evaluation and treatment of speech and language disorders in children. She earned a master's degree in Communication Disorders from the University of Pittsburgh in 1981 and was awarded the Certificate of Clinical Competence (CCC) by the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association in 1982. She currently spends part of each year evaluating and treating children's communication disorders and part time developing informational materials about language and speech problems for parents and teachers.
