Jack Levinson : Making Life Work: Freedom and Disability in a Community Group Home before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Making Life Work: Freedom and Disability in a Community Group Home:

Group homes emerged in the United States in the 1970s as a solution to the failure of the large institutions that, for more than a century, segregated and abused people with intellectual and developmental disabilities. Yet community services have not, for the most part, delivered on the promises of rights, self-determination, and integration made more than thirty years ago, and critics predominantly portray group homes simply as settings of social control.

About the Author Jack Levinson is assistant professor of sociology at the City College of New York.
